Chapter 1 by bryan dopp

No news is good news. Ahmed awoke to a quiet sound of wind blowing through the gaps in the bomb blasted apartment in Homs, Syria. He started a small charcoal fire to prepare his morning tea, as he began to mull over the events of the previous weeks. The cease fire that had begun two weeks ago was intermittently interrupted by minor clashes, but life had seemingly begun to immitate a semblance of normalcy, which he was now trying to adjust to.
